Mobile Medical & Rescue Vehicles

DGI has been providing mobile medical solutions to clients in the U.S. and overseas since 1987. From modular field hospitals to ambulances. Below: 88 semi trailer modules configured as a complete Mobile Hospital Clinic in Saudi Arabia

After landing the largest single export order ever built using GM Vans in 1998, John Dalaly became the largest U.S.-based exporter of GM ambulances. Such record breaking orders were repeated in succeeding years.

These “First Responder” vehicles, built on GM Suburban chassis, were part of an order delivered in 2000 to Dubai.

In 2002 DGI's ambulance facilities exported more than 3000 units to the Middle East. John Dalaly placed more orders for GM Ambulance Chassis than any other ambulance manufacturer. DGI's success in selling ambulances has evolved into a special relationship with General Motors. Our versatility and global connections allow DGI to take products and services to targeted populations and we do it with special emphasis on cost containment and flexibility.

Consulting extensively with health care experts from both the US and the Middle East, Dalaly designed and built ambulances suited specifically for the Middle East market, incorporating the cultural, economic and environmental factors that are important to medical personnel and their patients in that part of the world.

Because of this diligence and innovation, and the pursuit of recognition from local government approval agencies, D Group International is now the leader in healthcare services, internationally.
